

Reflection on Teaching

Animals are the most common characters in picture books, and students become familiar with the English names of various animals through many English picture books starting from lower grades. This is why they particularly enjoy the book "From Head to Toe."

During the Bingo game, one student calls out the cards first, then another student is chosen to take over. This activity allows students to practice listening and speaking in a fun and engaging way. They truly enjoy it. Depending on the number of completed lines, they get to throw darts in the next class, which adds even more excitement.

In addition to classroom activities, students are also asked to read the story to family members or classmates. This gives them more opportunities to practice speaking and receive feedback from others, helping to create stronger connections between English learning and everyday life.
